Carnival Wrestler Arrested

Mr. and Mrs. "Cyclone" Mitchell, the former wrestler with the Barkoot carnival, were arrested at Conne'lsville on a warrant from Monessen Saturday, and the athletic show then was dark Saturday night. Mitchell and his wife were mixed up in an alleged fight and robbery at the shows at Wireton when a local Greek was assaulted and nearly lost his life. Mike Kronor who was assaulted by Frank Pollock, another carnival employe, lost a valuable diamond ring and coat. The coat, it is said, was found in possession of the Mitchell. Kronar, it is said, is suffering from a fractured skull and may not live. Pollock and the Mitchells wer brought to Monessen by Constable E. L. Woolsey.

John Cook and Raymond Wilson of the Silver City Kid's Wild West aggregation, with the Barkoot carnival, were taken to Piedmont, W. Va., Saturday to face a charge of horse stealing. Three other showmen were released, as it was not believed they were connected with the robbery.

The shows had a season of perturbance while here as several of the party were arrested for gambling and were heavily sentenced. The manager was said to have had an attack of nervous prostration, but evidently he got better and was able to produce hilariously at Connellsville.

Bloodhounds Were Summond Last Night

A row in a boarding house at Arnold City at 3 o'clock this morning when one man was so badly beaten up that it was believed he would die, resulted in a message being sent to County Detective Smith at Uniontown, who in company with several armed officers and two blood hounds left for the scene of riot in the hope of arresting the foreigner who thrust the death dealing blow.

The trouble was the aftermath of a foreign wedding where booze flowed freely. In the altercation one man was dealt a blow over the head and fell to the floor in such a manner as to alarm the guests of the house, many of whom fled. A hasty call was sent to Uniontown and County Detective Smith at once marshalled Warden Newcomer's automobile and in an hour's time the detective and three other officers were in Arnold City with blood hounds and were on the trail of the escaping man. Later it was understood that the victim of the assault would live. Several persons who were present at the riot have been arrested.

—Miss Alice Murphy entertained a number of friends at her home in Belle Vernon Sunday evening in honor of her brother, James Murphy, who has left for a six weeks trip to Chicago and San Francisco. Guests were present from Belle Vernon, Monessen, Charleroi and Roscoe.

NOTICE ODD FELLOWS

All members of the I. O. O. F. their wives and families are invited to join the excursion party to Kennywood park on Friday, July 16th to participate in the annual outing.

A good program of sports and other entertainment has been provided by the committee on arrangements and everybody is assured a good time.

The train will leave Charleroi station over the P. R. R. at 8:20 a. m., returning in the evening. Tickets for adults for the round trip will be sold at 85 cents, and for half fare 43 cents. All are invited.

McShaffrey Manager Of Star

William A. McShaffrey, owner of the Star theatre, Sixth street, has again assumed the management of the house and is planning to make some extensive repairs. The theatre will be closed within a short time until the improvements both to the inside and outside can be made and it will be opened about August 15, a new and up to date palace of amusement.

Mr. McShaffrey announces that he will spare no expense to make the house answer every public demand, and the remodeling will be done in such a way as to afford patrons every convenience and comfort.

The exterior of the building will be repainted and otherwise improved and Mack will give the running of his house his personal attention and will always provide the best there is in entertainment. The activities will begin within a few days or as soon as further announcement is made.

Tom B. Cowan who retires as manager of this house, will devote his time and energies to similar business interests elsewhere. He will not give up the theatrical business, but has transferred his lease at the Star only.

Charleroi Sends $1,000 To Belgians

The Belgian Relief Committee of Charleroi received a check from Hastings, a small town near Johnstown, enclosing $100 to be sent with the Charleroi contribution. This $100 brings Charleroi's total up to approximately $1,000, which is more than the pledge made to the Central Relief committee by Burgess Woodward.

So far Monessen stands at the head of the list of all outside towns, with a contribution of $5,188.66. Monessen is not only first in industry, but it is also first in charity, of all other towns in this section.

Young Man Was Injured Yesterday

Alex Kennedy, a well known young man of Monongahela, was seriously injured yesterday while at work in the Monongah mines. He is employed as a snapper in the mines and had given a signal to the motorman to pull out with a string of loaded cars. The motorman misunderstanding the signal, backed the cars and Kennedy was caught between the rib of coal and the car and badly crushed about the body. He was rushed to the McKeeport hospital, but little hope is entertined for his recovery.

The injured man is about 23 years of age, married and the father of two small children. He is well known in this city, having visited here on a number of occasions.

Big Crowd Will Attend Outing

Committees in charge of the arrangements for the annual outing of the Odd Fellows which will be held at Kenneywood park Friday are busy perfecting plans for a gala day, and if the weather is favorable, they expect one of the largest attendances of any outing in the history of the lodge.

The train will leave the Charleroi station over the Pennsylvania at 8:20 a. m. and tickets will be sold at reduced rates for the round trip. Adults 85 cents and children half fare.

The committee on sports has arranged a big program with prizes for the winners. There will be races and all kinds of excitement for men, women and children. The park concessions will be open for the enjoyment of the picnickers and there is every assurance of a general good time for all who go.

NOTICE

Do not forget that the Bishop of the A. M. E. church will deliver his famous lecture this evening and that every person is invited to hear him. At the close of the lecture, there will be a reception tendered him and to every person who attends the lecture, a cordial invitation is extended to the reception free of charge.

Appraise Thompson Estate $65,000,000

Josiah V. Thompson, former Uniontown banker, who went into the hands of a receiver January 19 last, simultaneously with the closing of the First National bank of Uniontown, possesses coal lands and other property valued at $65,867,758.05, according to the appraisement filed with Judge J. Q. Van Swearingent in the Fayette county courts.

The appraisers were Julian Kennedy, R. C. Crawford and R. M. Hite, appointed by the court.

According to the statement, Mr. Thompson owns a total coal area of 141,413.68 acres, and the surface area aggregates 12,411.94 acres. The coal value in Greene county is $32,647,900.50, the coal area being 58,403.97 acres. In Washington county his coal area totals 10,172.29 acres, and is valued at $3,150,186.50. In West Virginia the valuation is placed at $18,868,841.55 consisting of 72,102.93 acres of coal. Properties in Washington and Greene counties on which plants have been built, are valued at $397,205, the property aggregating 3,972.05 acres. A valuation of $1,557,500 is placed on 562.4 acres of land in Allegheny, Armstrong and Beaver counties. The property in Fayette county consists of 732.67 acres of coal land and 7,877.49 acres of coal land and 7,877.49 acres of other land, being valued at $2,646,596. Notes, stocks, bonds, mortgages etc. are appraised at $6,099,618 40.

The holdings of Mr. Thompson in Allegheny county include the Highland building valued at $600,000; the E. H. Jennings property at $300,000, in Pittsburgh, and the plant of the Allegheny Improvement company, valued at $300,000 in Clinton. Of the most valuable securities are 1,726 bonds of the Isabella Coal and Coke company, valued at $1,208,200; 713 bonds of Pittsburgh—Westmoreland Coal company at $641,700 and stock in the Youngstown Sheet and Tube company at $484,000.

Sermon on His Own Text

"Dozens of men in this country have directed plots of assassination and have been instumental in killing the men against whom they plotted, but in all the murderous acts the conspirators were never able to gain anything of advantage to themselves or for the gang of murderers to which they belong." —Greensburg Tribune.

The Tribune never uttered anything more forcibly true. And this statement is made in the face of the fact that the Tribune has just entered upon another of its political conspiracy plots in which it seeks to again attempt to disorganize the Republican party of the county and send certain individuals to the political scrap heap. This time its bluff will be called long enough before it gets started, for bluff is about all there is to it. And in its own language we point to the fact that by such methods, it has never gained anything of advantage to itself or its gang of associates.

In this campaign the Republican voters are going to have a chance to exercise their rights of franchise without being hampered by the prejudices of a few bluffers at the county seat who feel that when their personal friendships cease and the patronage goes elsewhere, that it is time to villify and abuse and hoodwink the voters into a conspiracy to defeat men for office and ruin them for life. Well, not much. There are a few sane people throughout Westmoreland county who want to read the real facts, ponder on them and then use their judgment at the polls. The square deal is what most people are willing to concede, and this paper wants the Republicans of Westmoreland county to nominate Republicans and to do so with a clear understanding of all the issues involved. A disgruntled journalist can cause a lot of trouble. A disgruntled personal emolument seeker needs watching.

Whose Is He?

Meta St. Clair, former wife of Upton St. Clair, the novelist who starred in writing a book exposing the big packers for the filthy methods employed in their packing houses, has sued her former husband for the custody of their only child, David.

The former Mrs. Sinclair took up with Harry Kemp, a rough and ready traveler and christened him as her "soul mate" and Kemp told her she would either have to leave the child behind or the love affair would be all off. Mrs. Sinclair couldn't do that for she adored Kemp above her own family and she decided to leave little David with his father.

The loss of the wife and mother endeared Upton to the child so that the two became inseparable companions. Wherever Upton went there was David also. Life would have been lonely without the little fellow.

Finally Upton chose another wife who provided him a good home and took good care of little David. In the meantime Meta Sinclair and Kemp came to the parting of the ways (as all such love affairs finally end) and Meta has decided that she can never be happy again without her darling little David. She has sued and the judge will have to decide the future custody of the little one. Who do you think should have the boy? The mother who left him for a "soul mate?" Or the father who stuck to the little pal? If you were judge, you would let him stay with his daddy, wouldn't you?

Editor Proffers $40,000 Bond

Clarksburg, W. Va., July 13—Bond holders of the Clarksburg Exponent, a morning Democratic newspaper, who ousted the editor and publisher through a suit in detinue in Circuit Court, are now running the plant and publishing the newspaper in the name of E. Bryan Templeman, trustee.

Protracted litigation over the plant now seems impending as Mr. Fluharty today tendered Sheriff Ross F. Stout a forthcoming bond of $40,000 which, if accepted, will give Mr. Fluharty possession of the plant temporarily, at least. The bond, however, has not been accepted by the sheriff. The bondholders say that if Mr. Fluharty should thus get possession of the plant they will immediately make another move to oust him, papers for which have already been prepared.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

HARRISBURG MAN IS NOW HAPPY

I. E. Beckwith Says Wonderful Remedy Gave Him Great Help.

I. E. Beckwith of Harrisburg, Penn., was a victim of disorders of the stomach and intestinal tract. He tried treatment after treatment. Nothing gave him relief.

Then one day he discovered Mayr's Wonderful Remedy—and soon was happy.

Mr. Beckwith wrote to Geo. H. Mayr, the maker of the remedy and for twenty years the leading druggist of Chicago.

"I believe that Mayr's Wonderful Remedy is the greatest stomach remedy on earth. One dose would convince any one who is troubled with his stomach of its wonderful merits. It removed some of the most awful looking stuff from my stomach. I have taken other remedies, but they never helped me."

Mayr's Wonderful Remedy gives permanent results for stomach, liver and intestinal ailments. Eat as much and whatever you like. No more distress after eating, pressure of gas in the stomach and around the heart. Get one bottle of your druggist now and try it on an absolute guarantee—if not satisfactory money will be returned.

NINTH STORY

I

Sid Dodge's place was running full blast. Courteous, obsequious waiters slid soft-footed from table to kitchen and back again, bearing in their miraculous arms dishes adroitly cheted for the dissipated palates of epicureans—drinks cunningly mixed by the highest priced experts in the city. No expense was spared at Sid Dodge's place—the stakes were too big to skimp on the details that made for tone.

The room was filled with the strange murmur of many voices, high, low, soft, musical, harsh, droning—all contributing to an incessant mingling drum so meaningless in the abstract—so pregnant with meaning in each individual group. Bright lights made soft by artful globes hung suspended from the frescoed ceilings by massive linked chains; and mingled their mellowed radiance with the rose-colored glow of the numerous silk-shaded lamps that dotted the tables, and made pale faces seem glowing and warm. Luxurious carpets catered to daintily shod feet; bright silver gleamed in well groomed hands and clicked an accompaniment to the incessant click of long-stemmed, bubbling glasses.

In one end of the room, from behind a line of spreading palms, rose the rhythmic pulsing, passion-laden strains of Pagliacci, and died out in a plaintive wail of 'cello and viol, as though surfeited with the luxury of its own sweet sadness—died out amid the appreciative applause of subdued clapping and the slightly swelled murmur of approving voices.

No one seemed surprised when a low, artificially constructed door in the wall near the palms swung back on noiseless hinges, and a young man entered in evening dress. Why should they? They had all come in that way—all this well-groomed company of dissipated midnight diners, past the watchful, scrutinizing gaze of the lookout on the silent street, down a flight of dark steps, up another flight that twisted and wound its way to that noiseless door—A foul stem blossoming exotically in that dining room of mingled rose colored lights, soft voices and sweet music.

To the young man who took unnoticed his place at a snug table in a far corner, the artificiality of all this superluxury was immediately evident. The richness of the room so out of keeping with its dark approach—the flushed, eager faces of the diners, the too courteous solicitude of the oily waiters, pointed unmistakably to some secret vice as yet unseen. He gave his order to a deferential waiter, and again turned his attention to the room and its guests, his deep-set, shadowed eyes and pale, thoughtful, abstracted expression concealing effectively the fact that he was keenly alive to every move in the room.

The music again started, this time in a brisk, accentuated tarantelle; there was a flash of red from behind the palms, a clicking of castanets, and out on the raised dais flashed a slim wisp of a girl, and flung herself with abandon into the spirited dance of Spain. Her face wore a rapt, set smile as of perpetual pleasure, her every motion betraying how well she loved this rhythmic expression—her expression of the beautiful. The music ceased suddenly, bravely, in a spirited crash mixed with the smart double-stamp of the dancer's heels on the floor, and the thrilling clack of the castanets—there was again that subdued applause—again the resumption of conversation, and the dancer, panting and flushed beneath her rouge, came down from the dais, and curtsying familiarly, threaded her way between the tables. She stopped at one with a word of familiar greeting on her lips and sat down.

The young man in the corner watched her and her companion as the gliding waiter carefully wiped the bottoms of their liquor glasses and set them down. The girl seemed laughingly to propose a toast that met with the approval of her friend, who laughed heartily. The man she was seated with was a flabby, pink faced, tiny-eyed individual, his light brown hair combed smoothly back over his head and accentuating a lack of forehead that he had done better to have left covered. The second drink was brought, disposed of in as short order as the first, and the girl again seemed trying to persuade the tiny-eyed man across the table. His wavering was gradually lessened as she coaxed, and he at length got up and followed her to the wall, alongside that noiseless door. Her fingers seemed fussing with something on the wainscoting, when suddenly the wall slid back as though on a track.

The young man in the far corner of the room had to steady himself exceedingly not to betray his surprise. The room on the other side of the wall was as softly lighted as was the room in which he sat—but it was busy in there, without the subdued restraint of the dining room. The smoke of innumerable cigars and cigarettes made a foggy haze through which was distinguished a high chair on which a man sat spinning a softly running wheel. Around him, with tense, eager faces stood a group of men and women in evening dress watching with fascinated eyes the swiftly rolling ball. At a low table in the foreground stood a group of men excitedly watching a man in an enormous cravat and gartered shirt sleeves shaking a leather cup out of which rolled clicking transparent dice. All this young man at the table saw at a glance, indistinctly yet comprehensively—saw the young man of the tiny eyes, and the dancing girl, met by a tall stoop-shouldered man of about thirty, who after a few words from the girl and a mute, expressive glance, grasped the young man cordially by the hand and led him toward that high-stooled chair on which the man sat monotonously spinning the wheel. The girl stepped back into the dining room, the panel slid noiselessly into its place and all was as before.

But now some of the diners had arisen and the panel began an endless sliding to and fro as they went to join those in the smoke-hazy room beyond.

The girl walked slowly, smiling to the far end of the room in which the young man sat, hesitated a moment at his table, her head poised questioningly. He arose courteously, and pulling out a chair from the table, said, "Won't you sit down?"

"Thank you."

"Will you have something?"

She smiled her assent and gave her order to the waiter.

"You dance very beautifully, miss."

"Ah, yes, I love to dance." And then, inapropos, "You care to play?"

"No, not tonight."

"The playing is high tonight. The bankers are hard pushed. It seems as though luck is with the players tonight. Would you like to try?"

"I don't feel I should win tonight," he answered, laughingly. "And," his lips tightened over his slightly parted teeth, "I like to win. I like to clean up. I'll enter the game some other night," he said, a smile turning the corners of his mouth. "I shall come again, probably very soon, and when I do, I guarantee you I'll make a clean sweep of it."

"Yes, of course," she said wearily. She had heard that tone of surety many times before.

He rose and she followed.

"Good night," she said smiling.

"Good night."

He took his things from the waiter, and as he started to go turned and said, "I shall see you again."

She bowed and moved off, as he turned and made his way toward the low door of noiseless hinges.

II.

"It seems almost incredible, I know—especially at a time when the lid is generally supposed to be screwed on tight, Mr. Bell, but there is a gambling joint in this city, right in the heart of the white light district, that is running wide open to those who are in the 'know.' Roulette wheel, dice, cards, everything! I was there myself, last night—saw it all with my own eyes. The police must be fixed or they'd be onto that lookout on the street—they probably get a rake-off. But, I'll start from the beginning so's you'll get it straight.

"I was down to a social welfare meeting last night and walked east through Delvin street for a car. I was about midway between Bradley and Histon streets when my attention was attracted by a limousine that drew up to the curb about 30 feet ahead of me. It stopped before a low brick structure that looked as if it might have been used as a private warehouse. There were no steps—no areaway—just an unremarkable old door as an entrance with No. 59 painted on it in letters half washed out by the rain. Two richly dressed people—a man and a woman, alighted from the car. The man gave his chauffeur a quick order. The car sped away, and the two started for that door. There was a big squinty-eyed roach lounging outside it who seemed to know the people, for he smiled and saluted as they passed in. I decided to take a peek for myself, and walked toward the door as though I had it for my destination. The big rough became suddenly very alert and, walking toward me, shoved his face close up to mine in an effort at recognition. He looked doubtful and I decided to bluff it out. I waved my hand toward the door and raised my eyebrows as though surprised at being stopped.

"That seemed to fetch him, for he stepped back, said 'a'right,' and walked off a bit as I entered.

"When I got inside, I had to go down a flight of dark steps, through a narrow, twisting passageway, and up another flight of steps—darker, if anything, than the first—until I came smack up against a door. Inside I could hear the murmur of many voices, and a click, that sounded like the click of silver knives on plates, and I smelled food.

"I didn't know what was on the other side—but decided to risk it anyway, so I pushed open the door and walked right into the most magnificent dining room I was ever in in my life." From here on young Mason's narration to the district attorney is familiar to those who read the opening of this story.

When Mason was through, his chief turned slowly around in his chair, his face drawn and tense—his finger tapping positively the coat lapel of the young man before him.

"Mr. Mason, I want you to understand me thoroughly—there are no gambling dives in this city, understand?—no gambling dives running here. Forget it."

"But I—"

"You saw nothing, I tell you. Forget it."

Mason rose, his face burning, his whole figure showing resentment at the all too obvious meaning of his chief's words. He bowed coldly—and opened the door leading to his own office, just as a messenger boy entered with a telegram for Bell.

III.

Ellis Mason sat at his desk, his fine, earnest face puckered in a look of amazed discomfort. So this was politics! This was the field he had entered two years before as an outlet for the splendid political passion—the passion for constructive legislation that had so obsessed him ever since his entrance to college. On his graduation from college he had entered the government service as a clerk in the customs. He had written two books on political economy, had given numerous lectures on "City Government," and had made himself so talked about in the newspapers that he had, a few weeks ago, by popular demand, received the appointment of assistant district attorney under Curtis Bell. Now, two weeks after his appointment he found himself crowded close to the rail by a chief who was shielding the very sort of thing he was elected and sworn to wipe out! He was cut short in his reflections by an office boy with a message from his chief.

"The district attorney wishes to see you immediately in his office, Mr. Mason."

He arose and went to Bell's office.

Bell was standing by his desk, an open telegram in his hand, his face thoughtful but good-humored, as though pleased with something that had recently transpired. He showed no trace of the resentment of a half hour ago, when he had so arbitrarily impressed his assistant with the assurance that "there are no gambling dives running in this city."

"Mr. Mason, I have been called to the capitol by the governor"—indicating the telegram in his hand—"to discuss a political question of urgent importance. I shall return tomorrow. You will act on nothing unless absolutely necessary, and then only if you are forced to act. You understand, fully?"

"Yes, sir," coldly.

"Very well."

The district attorney turned to his papers, indicating with expressive silence that the interview was ended.

Mason hesitated a moment as though unable to restrain the scathing sarcasm striving for utterance on his lips, then with an effort that would have done credit to a much older and more experienced man than he was, controlled the rebellious spirit of him utterly, turned and went back to his office.

When Ellis Mason started for his office next morning, it was without the wonted eagerness of spirit that usually manifested itself in his quick buoyant step.

The keen pleasure he would have felt a few days before at the prospect of playing district attorney, only for a few short hours, was, now that the opportunity had come, entirely lacking. Yesterday's warning that he was not to recognize the existence of a gambling hall in that city—and that, after he had made a special detailed report of one—so depressed his fine conscientious spirit that he could not bring himself to view part of his work with the enthusiasm so characteristic of him.

If, he thought, this foul corruption existed in the office of an executive so trusted as the district attorney, what of the courts, judges, lawyers, police department? He felt for the first time since he entered the government service, how small, how ineffectual was his personal power for the good he so wanted to do. How could he fight the gigantic, irresistible machine, fed by the votes of the public, and oiled by the gold of unmentionable vice-exploiters who bought and sold chief executives as one might a dancing toy—a toy whose steps were regulated by the mechanism of the controlling party?

When he reached his office the next morning, Mason was surprised to find a young man already there awaiting him. It was the very man, he realized in a flash, who, the night before last he had seen sitting and drinking with that dancing girl in the gambling dive he had stumbled on accidentally—the same dissipated, pink-faced, tiny-eyed, low foreheaded individual who had allowed himself to be persuaded by the dancing girl to buck the bank. Mason wondered, fearfully apprehensively, what this young man of all young men should want in his office—wondered whether he had been recognized there in spite of the secluded table he had picked to escape observation. Was it possible that this young bounder had seen him talking with the dancing girl, and recognizing him from his numerous pictures in the paper, had come up here to be ugly?—possibly with an attempt at intimidation—at blackmail? He was alarmed for the moment, but was quickly reassured as the tiny-eyed one told his story.

"Are you Mr. Bell, the district attorney?"

"No. Mr. Bell has been called suddenly away, and won't be back until the morning. I'm the assistant district attorney—acting district attorney at the present time!"—here, Bell's words "acting district attorney in name only" flashed across his mind and made his cheeks flush—"My name's Mason—Ellis Mason. Can I help you?"

"Well, you'll do," said the pink-faced one, in a hard patronizing voice. 'It's this way. I'm a clerk in Marger & Barnes — mercantile insurance. Green's my name—Ralph Green. I don't claim to be an angel. I have my fun like the rest of them—no better, no worse. I don't kick when I lose fair; but I do kick and kick hard when I get buncoed—and I've been buncoed—buncoed for fair."

Here he told Ellis the story; told him the story he already knew, told it from beginning to end, and we shall take it up with Mason where, for us, it left off on the night that Mason stumbled upon the notorious Sid Dodge's place, running wide open.

The Hypocrite Gilson Congratulating Mason.

"You see," he finished, "If I wasn't sure that whole outfit is as crooked as hell, I wouldn't come up here squealin' like a kid. But I'm dead sure those dice were loaded, the wheel was lopsided and the cards were marked; and I think that this rotten lot of underhand pirates"—Mason wondered at his qualifying adjective—"should be sent up."

Mason felt it was a strange trick of fate that sent that young loose-mouthed rounder to the district attorney's office at just the time it was possible for him to act. He had been admonished by his chief to "forget it" when he reported that flagrant violation of the law, and it seemed to his highly imaginative mind that this moment had been opportunely selected by an unseen judge to weigh the sincerity of his principles against the material "success" of his career. He knew that his principles were right—that his ideals were noble, aspiring, splendid, true—knew that they would be true no matter how their injunctions were slighted, glossed over, spurned—knew that truth was unalterable, everlasting, infinite. Truth wouldn't be any the less truth or his ideals any the less fine because he failed to stand by them. What good would it be—where was the advantage of his broad conception of what was right and just if he failed to acknowledge it in his actions?

An Open Letter to the Officials of This Community

Gentlemen:—

Governor Frank B. Willis, of Ohio, last April said:

"A mud hole, the bad road and the high cost of living usually go together. Let us eliminate all these undesirable features by constructing better roads and BY KEEPING THEM IN REPAIR AFTER THEY ARE CONSTRUCTED."

He is RIGHT. And he might have added that a dusty, ill-kept road is a MENACE to the health and happiness of the community through which it runs.

It depreciates property values—it prevents the growth of your town—it takes away from the prosperity of your merchants—it is a blot on the fair name of your town.

Every time an automobile goes whirling by it raises a cloud of dust that settles like a pall of gloom on porches, curtains, furniture, carpets, the day's washing, making work for the good housewives.

They and their children breathe this dust-polluted atmosphere. Their HEALTH is imperiled.

It is not the intention of this letter to state where the RESPONSIBILITY lies for the poor condition of any road.

But it can be emphatically stated that it is the DUTY of every official elected by the people to bend every EFFORT toward the CONSTRUCTION and MAINTENANCE of better roads.

You owe it to your fellow citizens who have put their TRUST in you for the proper handling of municipal affairs—who look to you for the GREATEST RETURN for the taxes they pay.

It is up to YOU to remove this menace—to open the way for a hustling, progressive community.

The time to do it is NOW.

Do not stop because your financial budget is made up for the coming year. Talk to your fellow citizens and get their views on this question of discomforting, dangerous dust.

As town officials, start the movement yourself for better kept roads.

YOU CAN EASILY SECURE THEM.

Right at this moment The Atlantic Refining Company of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh is at work in every county of this state, with a big fleet of auto trucks and wagon distributors oiling or resurfacing hundreds of miles of State roads.

This company is under contract with the State and their road experts are CO-OPERATING with county engineers.

One of them is now in this vicinity.

If you will write The Atlantic Refining Company it will have this expert get in touch with you. He can explain how much this work will cost, how ECONOMICALLY it can be done, how EASILY and QUICKLY it can be ACCOMPLISHED, how to raise the money to make this improvement possible.

Remember your DUTY to your fellow citizens. This matter is vital to their SAFETY and PROSPERITY.
